

TINAJANI

Preliminary Factsheet

Tinajani Canyon

Located along the route connecting Cusco, Puno, and the Colca Valley, Tinajani Canyon is a private nature reserve sculpted by the erosion of an ancient lake that once shaped the Altiplano.

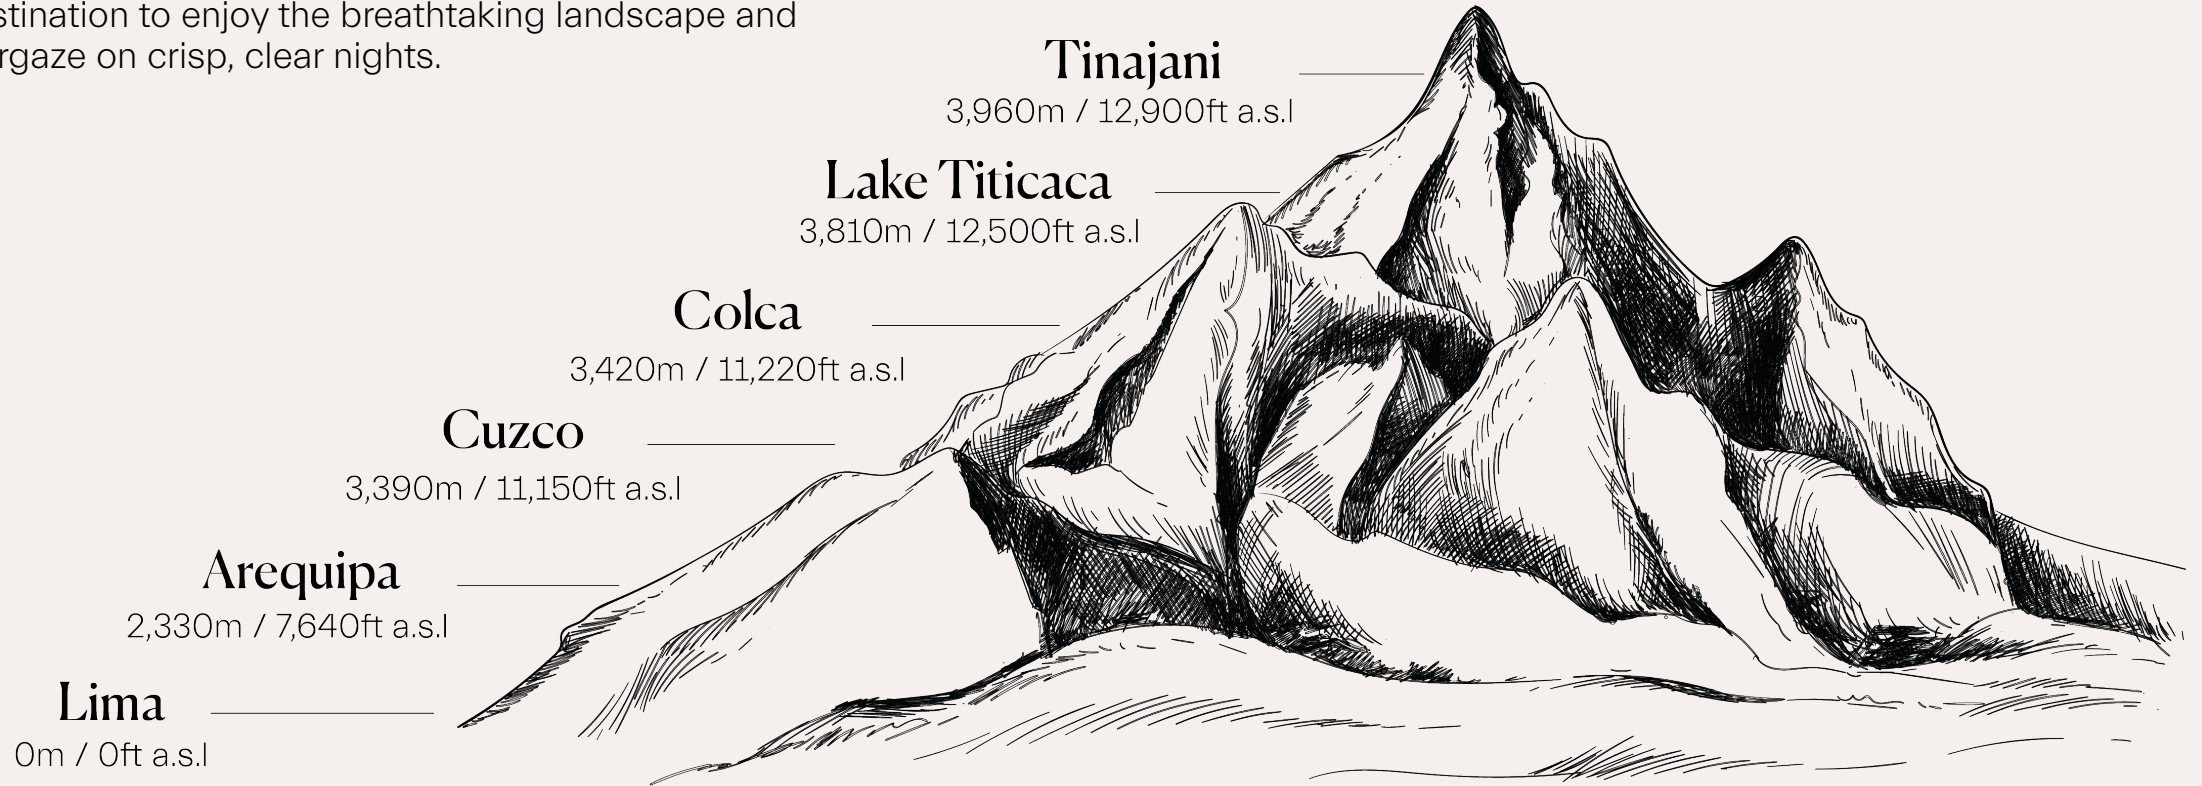

Known as "The Canyon of the Guardians," legend has it that ancient giants were turned to stone by the gods, remaining forever as silent watchers of this mystical landscape.

Rich in history, mythology, and culture, this place, with its almost otherworldly grandeur, immerses you in the majestic stillness of the Andes, leaving you with a profound sense of awe.

Altitude & Climate

At an altitude of over 12,900 ft, Tinajani boasts a unique climate that remains cool and dry for much of the year. The clear skies and pure air make it an ideal destination to enjoy the breathtaking landscape and stargaze on crisp, clear nights.

The Hamlet

Tinajani is a secluded hamlet where the vastness of nature embraces you at every turn. The main house is adorned in a rustic, ancient Andean style, evoking a profound sense of place, as though time itself has paused in this hidden corner of the world.

Each camp includes two tents — one for sleeping and another for relaxation — alongside a terrace with a private hot tub and breathtaking views, fostering an intimate connection with the surrounding landscape.

Among streams, picnic spots, and trails leading to hidden viewpoints, this place invites you to lose yourself in the vastness of nature.
